

DEATH COMES SUDDENLY TO GEO. S. ADAMS

George S. Adams died very suddenly at his home on the Cottonwood Creek on Friday evening, Feb. 24, 1922. He had driven to Dwyer that day on business and was sitting in his chair after supper while Mrs. Adams was reading to him. Turning from her reading she thought he had fallen asleep, but efforts to arouse him failing, a phone call was sent to the Wheatland Hospital and Dr. Phifer hurriedly answered the call but upon his arrival at the home found that life had gone. During his visit at the recent stock show in Denver Mr. Adams was taken ill from blood poisoning in his foot and had been under treatment at a Denver hospital for some time. It is believed that that illness may have been the primary cause of his death, the immediate cause being an embolism or blood clot on the brain. Mr. Adams was one of the best known and most highly respected ranchmen of the country and in his death innumerable friends feel a personal loss. He was born at Chicopee Falls, Mass., in 1859. He moved to Colorado in 1880 where he was interested in gold and silver mining for a time, coming to Wyoming in 1883 and engaging in stock raising. In 1892 he was united in marriage with Ida May Taylor of Boulder, Colorado, and to this union three children were born, all of whom, with their mother, are left to mourn the loss of a noble husband and father. The children are Claude Edward, Bertha Irene and Florence Edna. He also leaves a brother, Charles Adams of Hopedale, Mass., and two grandchildren, James Quincy and William Adams. Funeral services were conducted at the Wheatland Congregational Church by Rev. Chas. A. Nash. A large number of of the old time ranchmen of the county were present to pay their last respects to their worthy friend and neighbor. The pallbearers were the following ranchmen: T.A. Shaw, F.S. Mitchell, Ned Yates, Chas. McCullough, A.D. Russell and D.A. Patton.
