THE EVERLASTING ARMS

I sat beside his bed and held his hand
And wished that I could ease his labored breathing.
And by my strength of will I sought to hold him
For one small space of time allay my grieving
And yet I knew that God was close beside him
Not touching him ----but waiting even then
To guide him from all anguish and all pain
I did not hear a voice or see a presence

But suddenly as tho it were God's will
His breathing faltered and a sigh escaped him
His eyelids flickered gently and were still
And he whose life had been a thing of beauty
Whose thoughts and deeds the Lord had ever blessed
Went lightly unafraid and touched with magic
To take his place of Glory and of rest.
